There's a funny little shack built out of wood in the lobby of Usine C (1345 Lalonde). It has a shower watering the roof, while inside, drawings hang on the walls and ambient sounds play. Titled Sunday Something, the installation is the latest offering from the Orange/Brown collective. This group of 10 artists from Montreal, Vancouver and Australia assembled in a local studio over many Sundays to draw each other and develop the hut from the ground up. Their incentive wasn't to present a group exhibition, but rather to create their fourth exhibition as a group. The participants are writers and artists from various disciplines, and the idea behind Orange/Brown is to make collaborative artworks that force them to grow artistically outside of their regular practices.
